AED PLACEMENT

A defibrillator is a valuable device to have around when there's an emergency situation, such as a person's having cardiac arrest, or when their heart stops and is not receiving enough oxygen, which in many cases have proved to be fatal.

A defibrillator is a device that is designed to "jumpstart" a person's heart when it has suddenly stopped functioning properly. Another name for a defibrillator is an AED, which stands for Automated External Defibrillator. At one time, because most people didn't have enough knowledge on how to come to the aid of a person's suffering from cardiac arrest, defibrillators weren't as commonplace as they are becoming today, but because of the rise of heart-related fatalities in recent decades, the presence of defibrillators in public places are becoming increasingly common.
